

Adventures Abroad

The past few days have been taken over by working on the bulk of our research projects. We have been tucked away in one of the classrooms at Hyde Park Chapel. In the morning we generally will have a more formal lecture but come afternoon, we are brainstorming ideas on how to create our experiments. We have been running over and generally spend 4-6 hours a day in discussions.

The first two weeks of the program are structured this way because we are working against a deadline to get our experiments sent off for official approval. In between discussion sessions the other day, we took a moment to head to Westminster to see the statue of an ancient Queen who rebelled against the Romans. More...
