

Quincy À Paris

Saint-Malo is the cutest little port town ever. I think it honestly has been my favorite place that I've been so far on the study abroad. It's a town surrounded by walls. And they have the cobblestone streets and EVERYTHING. The highlight of my day was definitely when we went into this "ancient bookstore" and started looking through all the vintage books. I'm a geography major so anything with maps I'm automatically interested. I found this book from possibly the mid-80s (I honestly have no idea) and it has the cutest little illustrations of all the different regions of France and what they're famous for! More...
