Making the Case: Why Intercultural Competence Matters in the Professions

Monday, 8 October
4:00 p.m.
238 HRCB

Moderator: Ana M. Preto-Bay, Intercultural Outreach

Presenters
Alan R. Parkinson, dean, Ira A. Fulton College of Engineering and Technology, BYU
Parkinson’s research interests include optimization methods in engineering design, robust design, and engineering education. He received a BS and an MBA from BYU and an MS and a PhD from the University of Illinois.

Lee H. Radebaugh, Kay and Yvonne Whitmore Professor and director, Whitmore Global Management Center, BYU
Radebaugh’s interests range from international accounting ethics and the accounting profession in a global context to the role of culture and institutional factors on financial reporting. He received a BS in accounting from BYU and an MBA and a DBA from Indiana University.

Scott C. Bradford, associate professor of economics, BYU
Bradford’s expertise is migration, international trade, political economy, and Japanese economy. He received a BA, Brigham Young University, 1987, MPA, Princeton University, 1991, PhD, Harvard University, 1998

Watch for future innovative events exploring cultural competence across disciplines, professions, and areas. Sponsored by IAS 353 Intercultural Outreach, a 3.0 credit hour course and Kennedy Center program in coordination with BYU’s National Centers of Excellence.