Did you know that more than half of the intel used by the intelligence community comes from sources that you can find online? Learn from a former open-source intelligence officer how you can perform quality analyses on your laptop and join the intelligence community.

Bradford J. Bruton, a retired intelligence officer, just completed teaching a four-day course at BYU on open source intelligence. Bruton is a former CIA recruiter and now active in the area of federal contracting.