

WHAT CAN I GAIN FROM A MINOR IN AFRICANA STUDIES?

The Africana Studies minor is an interdisciplinary program that offers students a way to study Africa and its diasporas throughout the globe. This 18-credit-hour program includes an introductory course and a variety of electives.

WHAT DO I GAIN FROM AFRICANA STUDIES CLASSES?

- In-depth knowledge about an area of the world that can prepare you to work in that region or with people from those regions
- Understanding of theories and methodologies used in various disciplines to prepare you for future research and study in subjects like political science, international development, and the humanities
- Unique understanding of pressing issues, such as race relations, the environment, or international development that prepares you to engage in related discussions and work regarding these issues
- Greater cultural awareness and sensitivity that prepares you to work with people from different backgrounds in both a domestic and international setting
- Skills in foreign languages widely spoken in Africa and among refugees, such as French or Portuguese, or unique languages such as Swahili or Afrikaans.

- Participate in various study abroad programs that include hands-on research
- Work closely with professors on research projects and on-campus events
- Do an internship to gain experience for a future career
