

Recruiting Arabic-Speaking Students

McKinsey invites Arabic-speaking students and graduates with fewer than six years of experience who are passionate about driving and shaping the future of the Middle East to participate in edad Los Angeles.

The edad programme brings together Arabic speakers based in North America and offers them the opportunity to discover the universe of consulting, take part in professional learning programs to develop critical skills for the workplace and get first-hand insights about McKinsey and its work in the Middle East.

Those selected to participate will automatically advance to the first round of interviews for our Middle East Office.

At edad U.S. you can expect to:

- learn more about McKinsey Middle East, our work and the values that set us apart
- further develop your communication, presentation and problem-solving skills
- solve a case study to better understand the meaningful work we do with clients
- build a network of others who want to return to region and make positive changes

Who is eligible to participate?

We welcome applications from Arabic speaking students with fewer than 6 years of professional experience who are currently enrolled in either a Bachelor's, Master's, MBA or PhD degree granting program.

Is the event evaluative?

No. This event is non-evaluative. It is an opportunity for you to meet us and learn more about working at McKinsey. It is also an opportunity to discover your leadership skills and network with other participants from across the region.

Is there a cost to participate in the event?

No. McKinsey will cover your costs related to the event, including accommodation and travel. Please note that we are only able to cover travel costs within the continent where you are based.

If you would like to be considered for edad Los Angeles, please submit an online application by 11:59 p.m. EST, 5 April 2019. Go to <https://www.mckinsey.com/middle-east/edad-program> for more information.
