

Nathan Seifert (BA European studies) is a commercial officer with the U.S. Foreign Commercial Service—a career path that requires all applicants to pass the Foreign Service written and oral exams. After spending much of his earlier career in the private sector, he now works with firms in a variety of sectors, from concrete batch plant manufacturers to the top tech firms, assisting them in global expansion plans by coordinating with colleagues in U.S. embassies and consulates around the world. This September he will begin Chinese-language training at Diplomatic Language Services in Virginia in preparation for assuming a three-year post at the Beijing, China embassy.

Watch “The U.S. Commercial Service: A Career in Diplomacy, Business, and Life Abroad,” his Kennedy Center presentation from 2 February 2012 online at kennedy.byu.edu/archive.