

ISIS, EBOLA, AND BODIES THAT FELL FROM THE SKY: A VIEW OF GLOBAL CRISES FROM THE UN

THURSDAY, 30 OCTOBER
NOON
238 HRCB

Somini Sengupta

UNITED NATIONS BUREAU CHIEF, THE NEW YORK TIMES

Somini Sengupta is the New York Times bureau chief for the United Nations, where she covers stories on diplomats, warlords, and assorted mayhem. Sengupta's previous assignments for the NYT include technology correspondent and bureau chief in both New Delhi and West Africa. Her most recent article, "Venezuela Gets U.N. Seat; Turkey Is Denied," covers Venezuela's acceptance into the UN and reasons for Turkey's rejection. Past topics she has covered include child soldiers, receding glaciers, Himalayan monarchs, technology, law, and society. She received the George Polk Award for foreign reporting in 2004. Born in Calcutta, Sengupta grew up in Canada and California and received a BA in English and development studies from the University of California—Berkeley.