

EUROPE AS A MELTING POT?

RISING IMMIGRATION AND DECLINING
POPULATION IN THE EUROPEAN UNION

Mark I. Choate, associate professor of history, and James A. Toronto, associate professor of Arabic and Islamic Studies

WEDNESDAY, 6 FEBRUARY
4:00 P.M.
238 HRCB

Mark I. Choate is an associate professor of history at Brigham Young University. Choate has published articles in International Migration Review, French Colonial History, Modern Italy, Italian Culture, and other journals; his book Emigrant Nation: The Making of Italy Abroad (2008; Italian translation, 2013) was awarded the Council for European Studies Book Award and the Marraro Prize. He is a fellow of the Royal Historical Society, London, and the Società Italiana per lo Studio della Storia Contemporanea. Choate's research has been supported by the Fulbright, Mellon, and Pew foundations. He received a BA magna cum laude, an MA, and a PhD in history from Yale University.

James A. Toronto is an associate professor of Arabic and Islamic studies at Brigham Young University. Toronto was previously a faculty member in the Department of Church History and Doctrine where he taught courses in comparative world religions. He served as the director of BYU's Center for Cultural and Educational Affairs in Amman, Jordan, and was assistant director of the David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies at BYU for four years. Toronto writes and publishes on Islamic education, Muslim immigration in Italy, religious freedom and integration of religious/ethnic minorities in the Mediterranean littoral, and history of the LDS church in Italy and the Middle East. He received a BA in English with minors in history and Italian from Brigham Young University and an MA and a PhD in Middle Eastern studies from Harvard University.

CENTER
for the study of EUROPE