Allison Stockman's experience in the field of public health ranges from corporate work with Pfizer, Inc. to academic research in the regions of East Timor, South Africa and India. The focus of Stockman's past work experience has included household food security, health literacy, and HIV/AIDS related stigma. She received an MPH from the Yale School of Public Health in 2001, and during her time at BYU, she embarked on three field study experiences, both as a student and then as a facilitator in South Africa and India, graduating with a degree in zoology and a minor in international development in 1998. Stockman currently resides in Buffalo, NY, with her husband, where she is now working full-time raising their little boys.
