

THE ARAB SUMMER: WHAT IT MEANS FOR THE ARAB WORLD AND FOR U.S. POLICY

WEDNESDAY, 28 SEPTEMBER
NOON
238 HRCB

Roxane
Farmanfarmaian

VISITING SCHOLAR, MIDDLE EAST CENTER, UNIVERSITY OF UTAH

Roxane Farmanfarmaian is an affiliated lecturer of modern Middle East studies at Cambridge University. For the past year, she has also been a visiting scholar at the Middle East Center at the University of Utah. Farmanfarmaian's publications include "Out of the Revolution" in Paris was Ours and Blood and Oil: A Prince's Memoir of Iran, From the Shah to the Ayatollah; and she edited War and Peace in Qajar Persia: Implications Past and Present. She is a senior research fellow at the London-based Global Policy Institute and a consultant on politics, oil, and geostrategy for commercial clients, including Oxford Analytica and Advanced Educational Advising. Born in Salt Lake City, she was raised in Holland by her mother Verla Gean Miller (of Miller Honey) and her father Prince Manucher Farmanfarmaian, a member of the Qajar dynasty, which ruled Iran from 1786–1921. She attended the International School of The Hague and subsequently received a BA in Middle East studies from Princeton University. Her family lived in Iran during the revolution and hostage crisis, where she became a journalist. She moved to Moscow, working as a reporter and witnessed the cracks that would eventually lead to the fall of Soviet communism. Returning to New York, she worked for several years in commercial magazines and as a freelancer. In 2001, Farmanfarmaian arrived in England just as 9/11 occurred to obtain a MPH in international relations at Cambridge University, which led to the research grant she received to complete a PhD in international studies from Cambridge University, where she was a Donner Scholar of Atlantic Relations and a member of New Hall College.