John Price

FORMER U.S. AMBASSADOR TO THE REPUBLIC OF MAURITIUS, REPUBLIC OF SEYCHELLES,
AND THE UNION OF THE COMOROS

John Price served as the U.S. ambassador to the Republic of Mauritius, Republic of Seychelles, and the Union of the Comoros (February 2002–June 2005). Price is a proven business leader and committed member of his community on the forefront of economic and small business development in Utah and the western United States and in national leadership roles. He was chairman and chief executive officer of JP Realty, Inc., a publicly traded New York Stock Exchange Real Estate Investment Trust (REIT), headquartered in Salt Lake City, Utah, and a former director and member of the Executive Committee of Alta Industries Ltd. His civic, educational, and economic development has been far reaching, including having served on the Management Committee and Board of Trustees of the 2002 Winter Olympics in Salt Lake City, on the University of Utah's

Board of Trustees (1992–99), on the University of Utah's David Eccles School of Business Advisory Board, as a member of the Small Business Administration Advisory Board, and on the Industry Sector Advisory Council on Small and Minority Business for Trade/Policy Matters. He supports a variety of causes within his community, including the Marcia and John Price Museum of Fine Arts Building on the University of Utah campus and the new Price Museum of Speed, showcasing rare vintage race cars. Price has also served on the Board of Overseers of the Hoover Institution at Stanford University and was a member of the Print Committee at the Whitney Museum in New York. His memoirs entitled When the White House Calls was published in 2011. Price graduated from the University of Utah. He and his wife, Marcia, have three children and eight grandchildren.
