David W. Simons, deputy management advisor at the U.S. Mission to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (USNATO) in Brussels, Belgium, has been a Foreign Service Officer since 1996 and has served at U.S. embassies in Athens, Greece; Riyadh, Saudi Arabia; and Caracas, Venezuela. Prior to joining the Department of State, Simons held successive positions with the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM) as an investigator, an area representative, and a personnel management specialist, which afforded him the opportunity to travel widely throughout the Rocky Mountains and Southwestern United States, with duty stations in Salt Lake City, Phoenix, and Denver. Following a two-year mission for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in France and the West Indies, Simons attended the University of Utah, graduating cum laude with bachelor's degrees in economics and political science, and he received a master's degree in international management from the American Graduate School of International Management. He speaks French, Spanish, and Greek. Simons is married to the former Mandy Caddick, of Manchester, England, and they are the parents of three children—Emily, Zachary, and Jacob.
