Davis Brown is an expert in public international law, who has trained thousands of airmen in the law of armed conflict, rules of engagement, host nation legal pitfalls, and standards of ethical conduct during his eight years in the U.S. Air Force. Prior to that, Brown was with the legal office of the Multinational Force and Observers in Sinai, Egypt. His recent publications include "A Proposal for an International Convention to Regulate the Use of Information Systems in Armed Conflict" (47, Harvard International Law Journal, 2005), "Iraq and the 800-Pound Gorilla Revisited: Good and Bad Faith, and Humanitarian Intervention" (28, Hastings International and Comparative Law Review 1, 2005), "Enforcing Arms Control Agreements by Military Force: Iraq and the 800-Pound Gorilla" (26, Hastings International and Comparative Law Review 159, 2003), and "Use of Force Against Terrorism After September 11th: State Responsibility, Self-Defense And Other Responses" (11, Cardozo Journal of International and Comparative Law 1, 2003). Brown has an LLM in international law with highest honors from George Washington University and a JD from New York University, where he was also a fellow at the Center for International Studies.
