

Global Focus Lecture

Summer Term 2005

Secularization of New Zealand's Social Policy

Bruce Logan

Director, Maxim Institute, New Zealand

Wednesday, 13 July

NOON

238 HRCB

Bruce Logan is director of the Maxim Institute, a research and policy institution in Auckland and Christchurch. Logan joined the New Zealand Education Development Foundation in 1991, which became the Maxim Institute in November 2001. The institute believes in a society of free and responsible individuals, rooted in strong families, and a vibrant civil society. Logan writes regularly for newspapers, magazines, and journals on political and educational issues and has written several books. He frequently speaks around the country on a range of issues, particularly family, the role of the state, and education. A former secondary school principal, with teaching experience in many countries, he is a graduate of Auckland and Queensland Universities. Logan and his wife, Mary, have two daughters.

