

Asian Studies Lecture Winter 2009

Please Don't Turn Out the Lights: Eurasian Energy and National Security

Roger D. Kangas

Professor of Asian studies, National Defense University, Washington, D.C.

Wednesday, 11 February
3:00 P.M.
238 HRCB

Roger D. Kangas is a professor at the Near East South Asia Center for Strategic Studies at the National Defense University in Washington, D.C. Kangas currently works with the programs on terrorism and transnational threats as well as South and Central Asia. He is also an adjunct professor at Georgetown University and has written numerous articles and book chapters on central Asian politics and security. His latest work is a book entitled Playing Solitaire: Competing National Security Strategies in Central Asia. From 1999 to 2007, he was professor of central Asian studies at the George C. Marshall Center for European Security in Garmisch-Partenkirchen, Germany. Prior to that, he was the deputy director of the Central Asian Institute, Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS); fellow of the Johns Hopkins University Foreign Policy Institute in Washington, D.C.; central Asian course coordinator, Foreign Service Institute, U.S. Department of State; research analyst on central Asian affairs, Open Media Research Institute (OMRI) in Prague, Czech Republic; and assistant professor of political science at the University of Mississippi. During the past fifteen years, Kangas has been an advisor to or has run programs for numerous U.S. government agencies on issues relating to Central and South Asia, Russia and the Southern Caucasus. He received a BA from the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University (1985) and a PhD in political science from Indiana University (1991).