Loryn Anderson is a candidate for a second master's degree and principal licensure in the Harvard Graduate School of Education school leadership program. Anderson previously joined Teach For America, a corps of recent college graduates who dedicate two years to teaching in traditionally underserved schools, where she taught middle school language arts in New York City and earned an MS in education from Bank Street College of Education. While at BYU, she completed two, six-month field studies in India and received a BA in International Studies.
