

LIMITING THE RISK OF INTELLIGENCE FAILURE

TUESDAY, 17 MARCH
2:00 P.M.
238 HRCB

Loch K. Johnson

AUTHOR AND PROFESSOR OF POLITICAL SCIENCE, UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA

Loch K. Johnson is an author and professor of political science at the University of Georgia, where his research interests are the Presidency, Congress, and national security policy. Johnson's expertise lies in the activities of U.S. intelligence agencies. Three of his books, A Season of Inquiry, America's Secret Power, and Secret Agencies, display a comprehensive grasp of U.S. intelligence. In 1988,

Johnson received the Josiah Meigs Distinguished Teaching Award, the University of Georgia's highest honor for instructors, and he is a recipient of the William A. Owens Award. He was also instrumental in founding the School of Public and International Affairs. Johnson received a PhD in political science from the University of California—Riverside (1969).