Jessica Kaiser

PHD CANDIDATE, NEAR EASTERN STUDIES, UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA—BERKELEY

Jessica Kaiser is currently researching the Late Period Cemetery of the Giza Plateau Mapping Project, for which she has been the chief osteologist since 2000. Kaiser's special research interests include taphonomy and social archaeology of funerary remains. In 2006, she became a member of the Berkeley Hibeh expedition, and since 2005, she has also been responsible for curriculum development and teaching of the bioarchaeology specialization in Egypt at the Ancient Egypt Research Associates (AERA)/American Research Center (ARCE) field school in Giza and Luxor. A native of Sweden, Kaiser received a master's degree in osteology and Egyptology from the University of Stockholm, and has since worked extensively as an osteologist and field archaeologist mainly in Egypt, but also in Sweden and California, where she moved in 2001 after marrying her husband Kevin. In her free time, she enjoys scuba diving, music, and nature.
