Ask Me Anything on global careers in Asia, finance roles for liberal arts majors, graduate school/law school, current issues in Hong Kong/China and the Korean peninsula, and more.

David S. Lee teaches at the University of Hong Kong's Business School. Lee started his career at Goldman Sachs and has experience in investment management, consulting, and law. He actively advises start-ups and new ventures, especially those at the intersection of finance and technology. After graduating from BYU in Asian studies and international politics, Lee received three graduate degrees from Harvard (MA, East Asian studies), London School of Economics (MsC, organizational and social psychology), and UCLA (JD). Besides living in Hong Kong for approximately ten years, he has lived in mainland China, South Korea, the UK, and across the U.S.
