Climate Change, Clean Energy and National Security Why US Leadership Matters

Joe Bryan is a nonresident senior fellow with the Atlantic Council's Global Energy Center. He is also a principal at Muswell Orange, LLC, a clean energy consulting firm. Joe previously served as Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Energy, where he was responsible for policies relating to the department's installation and operational energy programs. He was a proponent for improving energy efficiency and expanding the use of renewable energy to extend the operational reach of the force and reduce risks associated with logistics support. He also led efforts to improve energy resiliency, promote investments in energy efficiency and distributed generation, and rethink mobility on Navy and Marine Corps installations.

Prior to his appointment, Joe led investigations for the Senate Armed Services Committee, including inquiries into counterfeit electronic parts in the defense supply chain, cyber intrusions into US Department of Defense contractors, and the treatment of detainees in US military custody. He also served on the professional staffs of the Senate's Select Committee on Intelligence and Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations where he participated in the investigation into Enron's manipulation of energy markets. Joe has consulted on energy policy in Namibia and South America, and began his career working on electricity restructuring and state-level policies to encourage the growth of clean energy markets.
